ELECTRICITY IN DENTISTRY. In the public journals, for some weeks past we have noted frequent allusions to the pain less extraction of teeth by means of the electric current, and some of these journals bear testimony to its success. It is stated that Jerome B. Frances, of Philadephia, was the first to produce local anæthesia by the application of an electric current, and patented the novel process, May 25, 1858. Dentists in Baston have used electricity in this way in very many instances, and always with
